Would it, we debated, have been different if a teenager had been drinking, say, a bottle of the parent's vodka, fallen and cracked her head open, or if the parents had come home at midnight, or if the fatal pill taken had been a prescription drug in the medicine cabinet?

And what if the incident had taken place outside the home - who would have been the responsible adult then? To what extent should a 15-year-old be taking responsibility for her own actions? Do we fail as parents if we have not taught our children by this age about the dangers of taking pills? Or must we accept that our children, in seeking their independence, are liable to be wilful and uncontrollable?
